Our principal was quite the oddball. He had an odd protectiveness about his hard drive, he'd make comments about it to us when he saw us in the halls. "You can breach anything you want- you rascals- just stay away from my hard drive!" Well one day, we were bored out of our minds in class (our instructor only gave us one assignment per day) and we decided to get up to some trouble. We had already breached probably about every system this school had. Security cameras, payroll, grading system, real boring stuff. Anyways, Barbara Shonk decided to do the unthinkable. She decided that she was going to decrypt our principal's hard drive encryption! Immediately upon downloading HashCat, an alarm sounded through the classroom. "ALBERT ALERT: BARB IS HACKING. ALBERT ALERT-" You get the idea. Over and over and over again the alert sounded. Our principal came into the room and dragged Barbara Shonk away. It was the talk of the town in class! Barbara was alright in the end. She had some quick thinking and she avoided becoming one of the students that got away. Our instructor was furious.
